Edsa I rites today split people power

By Joseph A. Uy Di Espa and Phyllis Chan

THIRTY-TWO YEARS AFTER LOSING to ex-President Marcos, a deeply divided Filipino people go their separate ways today to mark the anniversary of the dictator's downfall.

Groups assembling that President Ferdinand Marcos led the martial law era National Broadband Network (NBN) deal will converge on a national church, while those calling for his Ateneo resignation will march on Quezon Avenue (Munido) Bridge and hold protests in more than a dozen cities across the country.

Top military and police officials will show their support for the beleaguered Arroyo administration by holding a "unity walk" from the People's Power Monument on EDSA to Camp Aguinaldo. The Armed Forces and the Philippine National Police have brigaded their officers and soldiers to guard key sites and threatened to arrest any of their men who would join the protests.

At Ateneo will stay away from the government communication and national radio school in the Manila suburbs to protest the Arroyo administration's program providing cash grants for the health and education needs of poor families.

The weather bureau has warned rains for the weekend. Today is a good day.

CONFRONTED WITH ONE scandal after another, President Macanagal-Arroyo dug in yesterday, spinning tales for her to emerge and declaring, "I am the President and so-on-and-so."

On the eve of planned mass protests against her, Ms. Arroyo said after leaving Manila to Malabon that she intended to finish her term in 2010.

In front of family, friends and some government officials, she gave a fiery speech in defense of her administration's handling of corruption in the new national Broadband Network (NBN) project.

Her children, Representatives Juan Miguel "Mikee" Arroyo and Dianne "Dina" Arroyo and their families, were present. Arroyo was her daughter Laila and her husband, Jose Miguel "Mikee" Arroyo, who is ailing long, also present on Page 42.

"I cannot allow anything that is so serious to be handled as a political scandal," she said in a 10-minute speech.

Inquirer Read Along session special treat for 40 orphans

By Rose Virella Inquirer Staff

THE 250th SESSION OF THE Philippine Daily Inquirer's Read Along program held yesterday at the Reception and Study Center for Children (RSCC) in Quezon City was a special treat for 40 orphans aged 2 to 12 years.

They were accompanied by 300 adult volunteers from the Inquirer's Read Along program.

The RSCC is an orphanage which looks after abandoned, abused and neglected children in poverty and under the care of the state. It is a place where children are given a chance to live a normal life.

Pursuing the Philippine Dream

Another Edsa ...

Edsa, which has become more and more business people are now open to the possibility of an economic trend change in government under specific conditions.

This shift has become more palpable over the past few months and continues steadily with the new momentum of just a couple of years ago of business leaders who speak regularly in the Congress.

Major change needed!

Major business chief Francis Jose L. Gueo, Jr., who played an active role in Edsa, has said that the country needs a major change in the way it does business.

"I agree with Archbishop Angel R. Leonido about what he calls a different kind of people power," he said.

Gueo, who is also president and chief executive officer of Philippine, said that the people power would make sense if there were no more problems in Manila. And if it would result in a major change in the country's leadership.

"We need to get rid of the government as it is right now," he said. "We need to get rid of the government as it is right now, because the system of checks and balances provided for in the Constitution are not working," he said.

Other members of the business community, however, said that the government should not be a major change in the country's leadership.

Raul T. Concepcion said the country could not afford another crisis unless a "total" change in the country's leadership is implemented.

"Edsa is not a total change in the country's leadership," he said. "Edsa is not a total change in the country's leadership," he said.

democracy in Asia.

The country neither over the alleged corruption scandals involving the 4-year old second administration of President Gloria Arroyo. A nationalist people power movement seeks to end the life of her administration before it enters into its third year in 2010.

While denied a meeting on the Arroyo corruption case, the corruption watchdog, arising from the cancelled $220-million National Broadband Network (NBN) contract with China's ZTE Corp., say enough people are angry to be mobilized for mass action to step up pressure on the President to quit.

The outcome of the first people power approach in which more than a million U.S. troops went in the backyard to end 14 years of dictatorship of President Ferdinand Marcos is not promising in the opinion of analysts. As the momentum of political life, calling for the President's resignation weakens, the danger increases for the maintenance of the system by other means.

The longer the danger stays in effect, and the deeper the inequality crisis, the more the loss the moral authority to govern.

The impact of the anti-corruption movement, not excluding a high level of military camps and police, has been to reduce and allegations of abuse of power—such as those beheading the Arroyo government.

Philippines have been bogged by the 1986 People Power Revolution, a broadly based popular movement. They have rejected people power as a political process for perfecting change, raising them in full force in a split-off and counter-revolution in political deadlocks.

The problem—as pointed out by former President Fidel Ramos, one of the key players in the 1986 People Power Revolution—is that it is being mirrored by anti-government protest groups, but "the elements for a successful people power are not just present."

Personal turmoil

The failure of people power to come in the name in brooding the standard democracy creates more than a difficult task for President to govern and put the regime in a personal political turmoil.

These crises include resentment of army plots and renewed attempts to impeach the President over accusations of corruption in the 1986 coup and the use of police power in the abolition of key reform bodies. Such actions in the present has been coming at the time of the impact on the day.

The close-knit strategy against the Arroyo administration over the corruption at Aquino related to the 1986 coup and corruption over prolonged political administration that would lead to instability of government. This is the danger posed by the continuation of the impact.

The present movement is building momentum in the Senate investigation committee. The Senate civil service commission is expected and cannot wait for the end of the President's term in 2010. The size of people power has waned and is no longer available to regulate the mass movement of 1986.

Interventionist role

Strategies to restore People Power I, with its mass civilian protests, play into the hands of the President and the generals who, regardless of their loyalty or disloyalty to the constitutional civil government, realize that the current impact has cut into the power of the President and the military support for the Arroyo administration.

They thus hold the President and the political system hostage over as the movement to deny increasing civil society demands for her resignation. Clearly, the state machinery in this interventionist state is the military, which has remained a decisive influence and using elements in civil resistance since 1986.

The Arroyo administration remains one of the most corrupt, and the constitutional system remains hostage to generals.

The failure of Arroyo to quickly fix, pending decision to resolve the outcome of the interventionist role, effectively blocked Philippine democracy has faded over the past two decades. The original members of the 1986 interventionist—former President Corason Aquino and Ramos, and the Arroyo regime's former Minister Juan Ponce Enrile—have parked steps and have their own perspective on Arroyo.

Barren endorsement

On the one of the 1986 interventionist Ramos, a key player in Arroyo I, resigned his Arroyo at the wealth-hungry economy of the 1980s up to the present.

"It is necessary nowadays to designate or maintain the importance of the Arroyo regime, perhaps because the good and the ugly and the corruption are brought down during those days are more again making themselves felt," he said.

Implicated in Ramos' speech was an endorsement of the late-outlet people power. He said: "History might not call us to come together again—in other words, and however over the idea of our civil society." He also demanded the need to "banish from our political and economic life" allegations, dynasties and opportunists.

Ramos left short of endorsing his Arroyo as a necessity of the Arroyo tradition. He Arroyo to the beneficiaries of People Power II in 2001, which displaced President Joseph Estrada. This followed the alleged impeachment trial of Estrada at the Senate, based on a result of the "purging" payroll and corruption scandal.

Hopelessly unstable

Threatened by a third people power movement in 21 years, the Arroyo sought to denigrate the movement. She warned: "The world witnessed Arroyo I. The world witnessed Arroyo II. The world will see Arroyo III. Arroyo III is what we are looking for."

Another popular remark would not be acceptable to the rest of the "New World," she said. Instead, she said, "It will condemn the Philippines as a country where political system is hopelessly unstable."

The President offers a self-serving perspective of the Arroyo tradition. It is a distortion and superficial review of history. The Arroyo tradition is not the issue of political instability. The tradition can be viewed to the corruption and violence stemming from bad governance.

The Arroyo myth has failed to deliver the political and social reforms the people power participants expected from it. The restoration and beneficiaries of the Arroyo tradition increased the people's expectations.

The people and the Arroyo tradition are not in harmony for the weak response to the demand of the Arroyo administration.

PRESIDENT Gloria Arroyo is surrounded by residents of Barangay Bactan in Pangasinan City during her visit to the Bactan Elementary School.

Toxic wastes, war games anger peacemakers

MANILA, PHILIPPINES—Members of the US-based Christian Movement Among Filipinos (CMAF) have expressed anger over the American government's decision to use the Philippines as a site for military exercises even as it failed to clean up contamination it sited in two of its former bases.

CPT delegates one who they called "contaminating military contamination" as they visited the former Clark Air Base and Subic Bay Naval Base on the first week of the visitation, the largest of 20 or so exercises that resumed in 1999 under the Philippines-US Visiting Forces Agreement.

Clark Air Base and Subic Bay Naval Base were used by the United States as a major military base and naval base, respectively, in 1975.

"Clearly, US military contamination of the Philippines continues today in spite of the base change. It is quite apparent the contamination of the Philippines by the military is still in its infancy," the delegates said.

CPT said in a statement that the site of a two-day exercise with toxic waste sites in the mountains around Subic Bay.

The visit came a year after General Banfill, commander of the CPT, stated around Clark and Subic for a month.

US President George W. Bush has said that the US military must be ready to strike at a moment's notice in any dark corner of the world. But, Christian peacemakers believe the Philippines is a dark corner, but a corner of light, of hope, of love and of peace, "he said.

The CPT is involved in programs seeking to reduce toxic waste through privatization based on the teachings of the Bible, nonviolent direct action and joining local peacemakers to members work in Manila, Cebu, and other parts of the Philippines.

In Richard Williams, a vocal activist who studied that ten Nigantes Talaba in preparing a human resources program, said the American government "ought to be expected to do a change job before it is allowed to be taken again."

"It is too bad that the military exercises are allowed. The government will back off when there's pressure from the people and the eyes of the world are upon it," said Williams, who was involved in the cleanup and redevelopment of the former Subic

Naval Base in Olongapo, Cebu, said. "The US military must be ready to strike at a moment's notice in any dark corner of the world. But, Christian peacemakers believe the Philippines is a dark corner, but a corner of light, of hope, of love and of peace, "he said.

"One of the things that we find that we are doing here is letting people know that the army will not stay silent, the voices of the people will be heard."

In relation to Philippine soldiers, the US government had expressed its opposition to the use of the Philippines as a site for military exercises.

Maria Hernandez, executive director of the Philippine Task Force on Human Rights, said a "huge body of military contamination" was found at Clark and Subic.

The US General Accounting Office (GAO) in the investigation of the US military's use of the Philippines as a site for military exercises found that the US military had not conducted a study on the health of the people of the Philippines.

The Department of Health confirmed the high levels of lead and arsenic in the blood of several US military personnel who were stationed at the Clark Air Base. General, a former member of the US military, said that the US military had not conducted a study on the health of the people of the Philippines.

Rise in RP dengue cases worries top WHO official

MANILA CITY—A TOP OFFICIAL OF THE World Health Organization has expressed appreciation over the increasing number of dengue cases in the country in the last few months.

In San Francisco, a WHO representative to the Philippines said dengue cases have increased by 100 percent in the last few months, but he said that the increase is a good sign because it shows that the disease is being reported.

"We are a bit worried because dengue fever is a deadly disease, but it is a good sign that the disease is being reported. We are a bit worried because dengue fever is a deadly disease, but it is a good sign that the disease is being reported."

In Singapore, Dr. Tan Teong, director of the Department of Health, said that dengue cases in the Philippines were on an all-time high in 2005, with 45,000 cases.

While the 2005 figures were the highest on record since 1992, the number of deaths that year (13) did not surpass the 1998 record of 214. Tang said at the start of a two-day seminar on the dengue fever epidemic in Manila on Thursday.

The WHO reported that dengue cases are on the rise in many parts of the world. In the Philippines, dengue cases are on the rise in many parts of the world. In the Philippines, dengue cases are on the rise in many parts of the world.

Nancy E. who was assigned to the country last year, met with Philippine Mayor Alonzo Rodriguez Jr. and local health officials to learn about dengue cases in the Philippines.

"It used to be that the dengue cycle was every three years, but now, it is not anymore. It is now every two years. It is not anymore. It is now every two years. It is not anymore. It is now every two years."

Last month, Health Secretary Francisco Duque III launched "Do Dengue, Don't Die," a national anti-dengue campaign.

In the Philippines, dengue is a major cause of death. In the Philippines, dengue is a major cause of death. In the Philippines, dengue is a major cause of death.

At least 100 percent of the patients who died from dengue fever, Tang said, citing some deaths among children.

Hapee pins hopes on ex-UST ace Cruz

HAVE THERE BE A CHAMPION? ARMY COACHER Dave Cruz has been named as the Philippines' coach for the 2008 Olympics.

Cruz, the ex-UST ace who won the 1992 U.S. Olympic gold medal, has accepted the challenge. "I will do everything to help the athletes develop quickly," said Cruz, who was assisted by Hapee after Hapee and Cruz, who were at the 1992 Olympics, had a falling out.

Hapee worked to back Cruz's appointment in 2003 with a letter that included his ac-knowing and LA Times.

It took two-and-a-half years to get Cruz, but after two years, the Complex Protection made two final appointments but lost Cruz to the U.S. Olympic team in 2007. Hapee and Cruz, who were at the 1992 Olympics, had a falling out.

"I have great faith in him," said Cruz, who was at the 1992 Olympics, had a falling out.

The 19-year-old Rivero, meanwhile, will be on his second Olympic year of his after Athens 2004 following an impressive performance during the Asian qualifier in Vietnam three months ago.

"I'm trying to focus more on improving my skills and hopefully I could reach the peak of training in the Olympics," said Rivero, who qualified in the 47 kg division.

Go and Rivero will share in the address in the town of the South British town of Bellingham, which is the home of the Bellingham Olympic spirit.

MATCH PLAY FINAL

Woods takes on Cink

MARIANA, ARIZONA—TIGER WOODS edged defending champion Henrik Stenson 3-up to reach the final of the Accenture Match Play Championship for the fourth time in nine years on Wednesday.

Woods will face Stewart Cink, a two-time finalist after topping Justin Leonard, 3 and 2, in the other semifinal.

Woods never trailed in his eight semifinal with Sweden's Stenson, who tied him with a 13th hole on the 14th but the 27th hole has been somewhat of a curse for the world's No. 1 player, who might not be around if not for a 35-foot eagle putt he made in the final round, as James Hahn's eagle putt that put him in the right on Friday.

After losing a tough bunker duel on 12 but, Woods held the final put for a 1-up lead, and moved up with a 2-up victory when Stenson took four shots to reach the final green.

Cink, who was 7 under on his first nine before Leonard, has played in the final group with President Bush at the final tournament. Cink started that round right after teeing off.

This time, they start all square over 30 holes on the 18th hole.

Woods will have an advantage in experience, among other things. Cink has never made it this far in the March Year Championship, while Woods won in 2003 and 2004, and has twice lost in General Clarke in 2000.

Cink's last victory was the NBC Invitational in 2005. Since that time, he is a winner in 10 tournaments on the US PGA Tour, while Woods has won 23 times in 50 starts.

It will be the sixth all-American final in 10 years of the World Golf Championship.

Nobody played better on Saturday than Cink, who used his year advanced as far as the quarterfinals-only once.

He took an early lead against St. Open champion Adam Scott and pulled away with five birdies in a 10-hole stretch on the back nine for a 3-and-2 victory to reach the semifinals.

Cink and Woods have met only once in this tournament, with Woods beating him in the third round of 1999.

Ginobili helps Spurs gain tie for S'west lead

SAN ANTONIO—THE SAN ANTONIO SPURS scored a 79-69 home win over New Orleans on Saturday to record their 10th win in a row and join the Houston at the top of the Southwest Division.

"It was a fun win for us against a really good team," San Antonio coach Gregg Popovich said. "Our fans understood why New Orleans is at the top of the division during as well as they've done."

Popovich's Spurs scored 28 points and added a career-high 12 assists and grabbed 20 rebounds. Tim Duncan had 21 points, 11 rebounds, six assists and four blocked shots in the victory. "Obviously, there has been no time for quiet a while while playing 40-year basketball and I think Tony is back in the groove," Popovich said of Ginobili and Duncan.

The Hornets pulled from a 17-point deficit and tied the game with 7:35 remaining but the Spurs regained control to escape a 100-79 home loss in January.

Cink had scored 27 points and David Weir 14 for the Hornets, who lost for the second straight in seven.

"There is nothing to panic about," said New Orleans coach Byrd. "Now we know what we are looking to do against us, being physical, as we'll just have to adjust."

In other games, the New Jersey Nets scored a 100-91 win over Indiana.

The Philadelphia 76ers scored a 100-91 win over the Houston Rockets.

The Washington Wizards pulled up only their second win in the last 12 games, a 100-95 home victory over the Charlotte Bobcats.

The Utah Jazz scored a 100-91 home win over the Atlanta Hawks.

The Jazz are 14-2 in their last 16 games.

The Trail Blazers scored 23 points and added six assists and five rebounds to help the Lakers win a 112-85 victory over the Los Angeles Clippers.

Gov't raising tariff on oil imports to 2%

Move seen to raise diesel price by 50 centavos a liter

By Miguel L. Ho

WITH THE INTERNATIONAL price trigger points no longer enough to keep crude and finished product tariffs at one percent, the Department of Energy will raise the rate to 2 percent this month.

This, however, is still lower than the regular tariff of 3 percent.

DOE oil industry management business director Zenaida Mendoza said

Energy Secretary Angelo Reyes signed on Feb. 19 the certification for the 2 percent tariff, paving the way for its implementation in March.

The government will, early this month, the tariff on crude and finished petroleum products by 2 per centage points, bringing the tariff level to just 1 percent.

The tariff cut was implemented when international price trigger points were launched in the first two weeks of January; the escalation put

Pag-IBIG to sell P20B in bad assets

By Doris C. Durbin

THE STATE-CONTROLLED HOME development Mutual Fund, popularly known as the Pag-IBIG Fund, plans to auction some P20 billion worth of bad assets this November to clear up more funds for its low-cost shelter financing.

In an interview, Pag-IBIG Fund president Roberto Quinsac said the housing providers fund has sustained losses in buying at financial distress for the sale of the bad assets, 60 percent of which are made up of foreclosed property while the rest are highly delinquent real estate.

The second portfolio represents about 10 percent of Pag-IBIG Fund's P300-billion in total assets.

"Many of these assets were acquired when the housing program only had P50,000 in maximum loanable amount a borrower," Quinsac said.

To date, the Pag-IBIG controls loans for housing units priced as low as P200,000 up to P2 million, although the average outstanding loans is about P450,000. It has extended at least P50 million for non-housing loans this year.

"Still, it's trying to come out of the red," Quinsac said. They will provide the funds to be sold to the state or to the state's acceptable value of these assets because pricing has to be realistic, but as well as based on data and condition of evidence," Quinsac explained.

But Quinsac said Pag-IBIG would

Being only good news, market watch is expected the Philippine Stock Exchange index (PSE) to test the 2,800 support level, having already lost 12.41 points or 0.22 percent last week. At the end of trading Friday, the PSE stood at 2,800.24.

"The market is weak," CiticOnline president Corrado Ito said. "It may look like the price of people in the market right now. There's some 'hang over' attitude."

He explained that the recent volatility was prompted by investors who had positioned themselves in the market earlier this year, and now looking to take profits due to uncertain market conditions.

"The selling is being led by the foreign funds who came in earlier," Ito said. He also added that the uncertainty of the Philippine economy and the uncertainty of the political scene would also weigh on the near-term prospects of the equity market.

"There is a lot of negative news right now and I don't think that's going to change soon," the CiticOnline chief said.

Meanwhile, the US stock market is expected to report today, especially after a sharp decline in the last two weeks, leading some of higher interest and

VITRO

Data Center

More feathers in our cap.

Our recent recertification for ISO9001:2000 and ISO27001:2005 underscores our unwavering commitment to delivering world-class products and services at par with internationally accepted standards.

Combined with our accreditation by the Philippine Economic Zone Authority, these achievements prove that VITRO truly is a world-class data center.

I congratulate ePLDT for VITRO Data Center's 3rd certification of its ISO9001:2000 Quality Management standard and its 2nd certification to ISO27001:2005 Information Security Standard. These achievements attest to VITRO's unmatched capability to provide our country's data-based businesses with the hardware and foundation they need to capitalize on the growing global opportunities for them.

As well, I commend VITRO for securing its accreditation with the Philippine Economic Zone Authority (PEZA), which recognizes it as a world-class, environment-friendly facility that is ready to accommodate the needs of foreign investors.

In its 8th year, I have great faith that the people of VITRO will continue to be driven towards higher levels of excellence, in the process garnering more accolades, patents of quality, and satisfied customers.

Sincerely,

RAMON C. MANDILAO
Chairman

Philippine Long Distance Telephone Company

We are glad to be informed that ePLDT VITRO Data Center has received certifications on ISO27001:2005 Information Security Standard and ISO9001:2000 Quality Management Standard and an accreditation with the Philippine Economic Zone Authority (PEZA).

We hope that you will continue to uphold the image of the Philippines as a source of leading IT-enabled service providers. We urge you to intensify your capacity building efforts and showcase your company as a model for best practices, which other companies in the Philippines as well as in other countries should try to emulate.

Thank you and best regards,

SECRETARY BAS ANTHONY RODAS ORTA III
Chairman
Commission on Information and Communications Technology

Congratulations again to VITRO Data Center for another remarkable achievement!

The recertification of both your ISO27001:2005 Information Security Standard and ISO9001:2000 Quality Management Standard speaks volumes of your premier standing as the preferred destination for global and regional IT operations consolidation and as a major provider of superior Business Process Outsourcing and Call Center Services. Add to this your accreditation with the Philippine Economic Zone Authority last year and VITRO has truly become the country's foremost Internet Data Center.

We thank you for all your efforts and look forward to even more stellar contributions in the years to come.

NAPOLEON L. NAZARENO
President & CEO
Philippine Long Distance Telephone Company

We are very pleased that our VITRO Data Center has successfully achieved its recertification for ISO27001:2005 for Information Security standards (formerly BS2799) as well as ISO9001:2000 for Quality Management Standard. These international standards assure that the VITRO Data Center complies with globally accepted specifications for data center operations.

These achievements come just less than a year after VITRO received its accreditation with the Philippine Economic Zone Authority (PEZA). With this accreditation, the VITRO Data Center is now recognized by PEZA as a world-class, environment-friendly economic zone which can satisfy the demand of foreign companies for world-class, ready-to-occupy data center space.

With these certifications and accreditation, VITRO is poised to further strengthen the Philippines' value proposition as a preferred destination or hub for regional and global IT operations, and as a major location for the outsourcing of world-class knowledge processing and contact center operations.

We are proud of these great achievements of the VITRO Data Center as well as its valuable contributions to the ePLDT group. Congratulations!

Aetas join 'biotech revolution'

RP to go for share in $1B natural ingredients industry via 'malunggay' farming

By Amy R. Reyes

THANKS TO SOME 2,000 AETA FAMILIES, THE once sleepy corner of Marikina, Rizal, may soon grab a lucrative share of the booming $1-billion global natural ingredients industry.

According to the Department of Agriculture, these families have joined the 21st century "biotech revolution" through malunggay farming, allowing them to possibly become a major supplier of one natural product to the world market.

Through "Buklod Kabigay" (hand-in-hand) farming, these families from 12 Aeta communities will be given a training on malunggay farming, enabling them to cultivate the malunggay seeds in their lands.

The program aims to improve the indigenous peoples of the area who can tap their vast ancestral lands to create their own products," Alicia Bago, director of the Department of Agriculture Biotechnology Program Office, said in a statement.

Labeled as a "super food," the government program intends to promote the massive cultivation of the locally malunggay to help fight poverty, hunger and malnutrition in rural areas.

Dubbed as the "miracle vegetable," malunggay has been found by scientists and modern medicine to be a rich source of vitamins A, C, E, and K, and high density lipoprotein (HDL) cholesterol in good cholesterol.

A combination of antioxidant and antioxidant properties can be reportedly found in the plant's root bark extracts.

As a green leafy vegetable, malunggay is also found to contain phytochemicals that can prevent the development of cancer cells.

Aeta from various, the most of other chronic diseases like arthritis, heart complications and kidney diseases can be prevented because of the protein extracted from malunggay.

It also helps maintain good weight, facilitates digestion and blood circulation, and can be used to clean wounds, cure stomach aches, urinary ailments, rheumatoid arthritis.

Since the pine trees, the "program will include a big help in the area, who suffer from extreme poverty despite having a vast ancestral land, which they can (now) turn into an agro forestry plantation for the supply of malunggay seeds."

Currently, Aeta in this corner a manager P100 a day, said Rosalinda Aeta, an Aeta leader. "Training for their everyday food resources is very of the Aeta people," he explained.

The DA program, however, goes beyond teaching Aeta the basics of malunggay farming.

Aeta who cultivate malunggay seeds are now assisted of a buyer, as between International Corp. signed a purchase agreement with the Marikina to supply malunggay to the Marikina. Aeta is a local biotechnology firm which offers contracts to grow the backyard vegetable tree. It has also provided the extension of soil from the seeds of malunggay, scientifically known as Leucaena glauca.

Aeta is currently working towards the supply of malunggay seeds and leaves. It expects earnings of 10 pesos per hectare from the malunggay products and supplies processed malunggay leaves in local food products.

Under the purchasing agreement, Aeta will buy malunggay seeds from the Aeta at P10 a kilo.

Since that time, the seeds have gone up, producing as much as one kilo of fruit per tree in 10 days of the seeds.

In the past, the Marikina is struggling to supply malunggay to the Marikina in their vast ancestral land, having it into a malunggay plantation for the purpose of supplying the seeds to Aeta people.

Since Marikina, producer and chief researcher of Aeta said that already, a US biotechnology firm is willing to buy a particular volume of malunggay seed oil, which will require some 500,000 hectares of land planted to the vegetable tree.

During the launch, the DA, through the Bureau of Plant Industry, distributed malunggay seedlings to encourage farmers to join the program.

Other highlights of the program include the establishment of a Aeta Biotech Information Resource Center and provision of bio data and medical services.

Meanwhile, the President's Commission on the Role of the Aeta in the Development of the Philippines had expressed support for the program and had vowed to help in the marketing aspect of malunggay products and byproduct.

The success story of Philamlife—Part I

MAPPING THE FUTURE

Jose L. Carillo, Jr.

A major policy reform which the Monetary Board undertook was the partial lifting of foreign exchange controls in 1991 and 2003, to provide a more liberal financial exchange environment. This move was (naturally) resisted by the international and local business communities and foreign funds present in the local capital market. Subsequently, during the term of President Fidel V. Ramos, we were in the process of the MIP meeting the new Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas in order to have a more independent central bank. The BSP was also removed from the Imbayá Sanction Program of the government, thus allowing it to pay foreign corporations, particularly in the professional staff.

For their unqualified support and support of the central bank's independence, I publicly acknowledge my sincere debt of gratitude to President Corason and likewise to President FVR who was instrumental in introducing Congress to pass the bill creating the new BSP. I also thank MGC Chairman FVR for his support with the Imbayá Sanction Program. Finally, I also thank my former BSP and CB colleagues for their support and cooperation in all of our undertakings.

Though I am no longer in the public sector, I believe it is the duty of every Filipino citizen to work for a better country. I am now involved in an advisory to fight and eradicate corruption in government, which I believe is aligned with MGP's theme of "Country Above Self: Responsible Governance." The fight against corruption becomes more imperative after we have met and heard about the credit-worthiness of unsoundness of government in government. May I invite the MGP to join the Coalition Against Corruption, an aggregation of business and church groups, together with NGOs which are engaged in a campaign to fight corruption so that we may have a better country for our children.

The Philamlife story

To maintain good relations with the public sector, I immediately decided to return to the private sector in 1990. I became the president and chief executive officer of the Philippine Insurance Life and General Insurance Co. I found myself deeply immersed and excited with my new company. Philamlife has now been my longest stay in my organization, since 14 1/2 years, and I have absolutely no intention of leaving.

I believe our accomplishments are reflections of the leadership team is privileged to serve, in the same way a body of work reflects its surroundings. The house around me today is not mine alone. Rather it is a product of my greater efforts in the organization. I certainly represent. Please allow me, therefore, to note that the Philamlife story with you tonight.

Philamlife came into being in 1987 on the basis of the destruction of World War II. Our founders, Earl Carroll, God Bless his soul, was an extraordinary man of vision. He envisioned a clean and lofty business purpose—to have a Philamlife policy in every Filipino household. From the very beginning, Mr. Carroll set our performance bar to such a height that he made sure it would never be reached. His years and vision, it would remain generations of Philamlifers, from ordinary employees and sales people to the highest executives, with a sense of responsibility and fulfillment. The charity of Mr. Carroll's all-encompassing vision lives on, and because of this we feel we will never be able to do so without him.

Mr. Carroll was the longest time of Philamlife. He ran the company with personal touch, especially for the thousands of sales associates and agency leaders all over the country. Mr. Carroll was a business campaigner, introducing our products to the '80s and '90s in order to make the larger sales network even more in our industry in this day. Mr. Carroll called our office "House of savings" as that spirit and philosophy still would continue the value of his business as an important means of stabilizing the small savings of millions of Filipinos.

In so far as my duty within the house around me today is not mine alone, I believe that the vision that we the Philamlife's unique corporate culture of never being large enough not to serve all the people throughout the organization's vast nationwide network.

In its 60 years of existence, Philamlife has had only four presidents, compelling proof of our company's stability and longevity. From Mr. Carroll the founder of leadership was passed on to Cesar Zalameda, Philamlife's first Filipino president. Mr. Zalameda is a well-known insurance Philamlife leader, strength and integrity. From his career largely in the investment side of the company's business, Mr. Zalameda recently established the Monetary and Finance Financial Practices that Philamlife is known for. He notified us our people the conviction that we are neither too big nor too small to be successful with our client's money nor in their share in our experiences. To this day, Philamlife imposes upon itself the toughest and most stringent financial controls, meeting it on something regulatory standards. Perhaps for some, Philamlife may appear stiff and restricting in terms of its business practices, but I can assure all our stakeholders they are simply soundly at night with the fact that Philamlife will never take undue risks that their hard-earned funds. This is the legacy that Mr. Zalameda bequeathed upon Philamlife. (To be continued.)

(Speech delivered by the author who is president and CEO of Philippine American Life and General Insurance Co., after the MGP Management Plan of the last 2007 award was conferred on his country. Address at mapgphila.com.ph)

SO MANY PEOPLE MADE A positive difference in my life. Foremost among them are my parents, Jose Jr. and Magplaine L. La Salle University where I received an excellent elementary secondary and tertiary education. Together with the Christian Brothers, they made my life so much more during those formative years. From them I learned the virtues of hard work, discipline, honesty, perseverance, and justice, which shaped my character as well as my philosophy. I still recall what my father said to me when I was in high school, "Son, I may not have you much in terms of material wealth but I will leave you a good name. Honor it and treasure it!" His words resonated in me of the religious passage in the Book of Proverbs (22:1) "A good name is to be chosen rather than great riches." Respectfully, my great children be here to share this honor with me tonight because my Dad has given me to the rest of my life while my mother is here today to give me a word of advice. But to them and to the Christian Brothers represented here by Rev. Fr. Antonio Llamas and Fr. Gus Freytag, I say again, "Thank you." Bless the house of my life.

The early years

After leaving La Salle, the elite college graduation in that year, I began to build a proper foundation in the corporate world by joining a number of companies such as Procter & Gamble Philippines, the Ayala Investment and Development Corp., the Insular Bank of Asia & America, and Union Bank. I am deeply indebted to these institutions for the sound management foundations they instilled in me during the early years of my career. I eventually moved on to other organizations and to the company I lead today, but I am deeply grateful for the guidance and influence of my early employers and mentors.

My public service stint

Shortly after the People Power Revolution in March 1986, President Corason invited me to assist the government by taking the helm of the Social Security System. This was the beginning of my role in public service. My first role was to replace the SSS records through computerization. Within two years we had cleared all the backlog and became a model in our village in employees. A major reform measure I undertook was to get President Corason to amend the SSS charter to allow us to invest 10 percent of the state pension's investible funds in prime listed equities, while the remaining 90 percent would be placed in bonds or deposits or well as investments in government securities and private registered funds. Later on, we allowed members to borrow from the SSS to invest in investible prime listed equities.

After serving four years as SSS administrator, President Corason asked me to head the Central Bank upon the request of Governor Juan Ponce Enrile. My first two years as CB governor were devoted to the reorganization of Philippine Commercial bank debt and strengthening the banking system as well as the international reserves of the Central Bank.

City of Pines uses biodegradable plastic bags

By Diana Dencible
Inquirer Staff Writer

BAGUIO CITY—IT'S THE NEXT BIG thing in the bayong.

In the City of Pines, blue plastic baggies are now being used to fill metal straws, but these are not ordinary plastic bags—they are biodegradable and they are Filipino-made.

Though exactly like ordinary plastic bags in appearance and look, these baggies are made of a biodegradable plastic, containing no lead or metal.

"It looks like plastic but it is not plastic. It has some lead content and some metal content," Mayor Melvin Magsaysay Jr. said.

"It's very safe and it's biodegradable, and will fully decompose in six months or less, it turns into powder and blends with the soil within a few months."

He said that the technology is very cheap since it is a Filipino technology.

The city council in 2002 passed an ordinance that prohibits business establishments from using plastic bags.

Residents initiated the document amendment to mean a gradual replacement of the prohibited materials until full implementation in 2005.

The council has not yet amended the measure.

Residents say the new total-bags ordinance (BAG) is a commendable program for its 20th anniversary.

With 6M now in the lead, other businesses would follow, he says, adding that 6M alone accounts for some 40 percent of waste plastic bags in the city.

Thus, according to Baguio, is the first step in phasing out non-biodegradable packaging materials, particularly plastic bags, by 2012.

The city is the first in the country to promote the use of biodegradable plastics.

its months and becomes more hazardous with high concentrations of methane gas in the bins.

The city dumps around 300 tons of waste in its open dumpsites daily, 40 percent of which are biodegradable wastes.

While 70 percent of the waste dumps is already closed, covered with gravel and ready for solidification, 30 percent of the waste is rotting in a temporary dumping site the city looks for a suitable area for a sanitary landfill.

But with additional problems coming from communities that may be affected if the city relocates its dumps in their area, it may get by more than six months before the city finds a solution.

An option, according to Baguio, is to request Baguio Gov. Nemesio Enriquez for a temporary arrangement for the city to dump its garbage in its brother's landfill for a month.

Another is for the city to build retaining walls along cliffs and use them as temporary dumping grounds.

"IT LOOKS like plastic but it is not plastic. It has some lead content and some metal content."

"The minimum requirement for a landfill for hazardous (H) wastes on landfills will be very far from this ordinary landfill," Enriquez says.

Baguio, the recently named best town in the world, is now a sanitary landfill, and Enriquez, whose father built the city's first landfill, said there is no risk left in the town.

Fine dining at home? Hire a personal chef

SHIRLEY DIAO WAS EIGHT YEARS OLD when she had her first taste in the kitchen. From the simple art of cooking rice, she began to cook traditional Filipino dishes under the guidance of her late grandmother.

At the age of 12, Shirley developed her love for cooking while studying abroad in the United States. She was a member of the National Honor Society and the National Student Council.

Even though she graduated at a top class, Shirley knew there was more to life than just studying. She wanted to pursue her passion for cooking.

It was also during those times that she started specializing in French and Italian cuisine, primarily because her children loved these foods during their travels.

As she grew older, she went to work for a company and started saving money. She wanted to start her own business and provide a service that she loved.

After years of experience as a chef, Shirley realized that it was time to try an other challenge—as open her own restaurant. In 2001, with her husband and two children, she started Shirley's Kitchen.

Everything seemed to be going smoothly but, managing her first business while still looking after her family was a challenge. She had to balance her professional and personal life.

SHIRLEY DIAO

"I chose it because I want to spend my time with my children. It was a tough choice, but Shirley knew it was for the best. She knew she wanted to provide a service that she loved."

She started cooking for family friends and soon enough, word spread. She began to receive requests for private chef services.

"Getting a professional chef is better because it is more professional. She can cook for a group of people and provide a service that she loved."

"It's still like eating in a fine-dining restaurant. She can also choose to suggest the right food for your guest."

Stephen King's phantom pain

By Neil S. De Vries

CONSIDERING HOW much has happened to Stephen King, it is easy to be spoken by the thought that writing better really isn't for the fainthearted.

After overcoming adolescent abuse early in his career, King hyped in a juvenile suicide accident in Maine in 1999.

Instead of ending him, however, the accident has convinced him, as King has written more and written better since.

REVIEW

"Duma Key" (Orbit, New York, 2008, $11.99) is the latest in the horror master's astonishing 40th novel and one of his best ever.

Horror contractor Edgar Freemantle's life goes terribly off the rails when he loses his arm in a truck construction-site accident, making him fearful, of his incapacity of proper speech, and full of spiritual rage.

After his wife ends her divorce, Freemantle opts for a change in scenery and lands in a house he calls Big Pink, on a secluded, overgrown island called Duma Key in Florida. There, he knows strange sounds.

"I only know that something was going on for me," he thinks, "inside me. Sometimes it felt a little scary. Sometimes it felt pretty goddamn wonderful."

Then, he begins painting, all alone on the island, listening to music and ships, accompanied by rock music and a red laser. Each remarkable voyage is troubled by a powerful sick where his arm used to be, and, immediately after, he feels something else. "I was angry. Scared."

Freemantle meets the doctor on the island, becoming quick friends with the eccentric character Winslow and the troubled old lady Elizabeth Earls, owner of Duma Key. He has a nagging feeling this isn't random. "The three of us were here because something wanted us here."

His paintings grow beautiful and powerful. "That was when something changed. That was when something shut slipped in."

Freemantle is shocked when his paintings start people he has never met and things he cannot have known but are both real and true. He finds out he can do even more through the paintings, terrible and terrible things. "The feeling of these Duma pictures was horror, beauty held in check, interior writing, it happened, it happened on island walls."

There is nothing scary in the first 300 or so pages of "Duma Key," but then you can feel a sense to slide away at the edges of your attention, alluring at the periphery, waiting. Three-fourths of the way in, it steps out of the shadows and everything sticks into a real place, as King screams on edge: "Because art is magic, and not all magic is white. Not even for little girls."

What follows is heart-breaking loss and an arpeggio, surprisingly action-packed intermission that will keep readers up, pondering what rocks out from the sea at night and vision over hours.

King invents more of himself in this book. While his other novels are mostly based in New England (King writes mostly in Maine), "Duma Key" reflects the fact that King now also lives in Florida, hence this book's setting. Here he revisits a favorite theme: what happens when a person suffers tragedy and comes through art. In this, "Duma Key" has many similarities to "Bag of Bones."

But this is a more potent, more terrifying book. King juxtaposes the events in Freemantle's life with cryptic instructions on "How to Draw a Picture" that soon become horrifying clear. "Don't be afraid to draw the worst things," the book advises.

By far, this is the King book that features the most memorable supporting characters, particularly the Japanese-speaking, white-dwelling Winslow. In contrast, the narrator Freemantle, while effective, is at most identical to unnamed narrators Michael Newman from "Dune."

In recent years, King talked of retirement even as his work was being made into movies, television projects and comic books, yet it remains clear he is still best experienced in book form.

'Duma Key' is a complex and chilling testament to the harrowing link between tragedy and art

A new high point from a writer at the peak of his powers, "Duma Key" is a complex and chilling novel that no reader or writer can properly consider, a book that makes you want to start painting and also to never paint at all, leaving readers unsettled and terrified by a reminder that all art has a price.

This is a companion volume to "Daghiy Dagitag: Mga Kawalangang Pinanawagan," a book fiction anthology in English that was also edited by Guepco. The two volumes contain different stories written by different authors.

Flash fiction, or sudden fiction, for our hectic lives today like a glove. Since we all have little time for reading between working, commuting in heavy traffic, listening, mailing, surfing the Internet, e-mailing, and watching numerous channels on cable TV, we can consume literature and more with very short fiction.

The 20 questions in this book are each completed in one to two pages. All of the stories, however, create complex and complex worlds with remarkable speed and economy of words. The stories can be read a few minutes at a time while using breakfast, sitting on the bus, on buses, trains, or tanks; during a coffee break, or just before going off to sleep. They are to be sampled, savored and returned to again and again in quick hours of reading. They will remain to the reader's mind forever because of their high quality and remarkable

Child Development Expert Encourages Parents to Expose, Explore, Experience

Just because a child isn't good in math, it doesn't mean that he's not smart. A difference and be intelligent with numbers. But he may be actually being stupid.

Three Areas of Responsibility

Traditional learning skills such as reading only reflect cognitive ability, which is just one aspect of a child's total development. A child has three domains of development: physical, cognitive, and socio-emotional. The goal of education, at home and in school, should be to equally nurture and develop all three. This is where exposure to outdoor and to nature comes in.

Discussion

Therapy is part of your child's morning routine, so prepare your preschooler by a variety of materials and activities that can stimulate his body, mind and feelings. This means providing him with a safe, yet stimulating environment so that you can confidently walk away from a distress

From the first, with-age-aggressive boys, and eventually, with no further trial value. But only so the boys can comfortably accommodate these boys, he will also learn enough about the boys, what and how, to be able to be a child of another boy to play along with them, to be comfortable with them, to be a strong and healthy boy himself.

Professor Robbins got a series of letters and telephone calls filled with descriptions of his sister's life. She says even children put it on play that their one of said, "sister, how pretty and play, brought to get his finger another working. As he explains with these materials, don't tell him what to do. You will be surprised to discover how creative he is."

Outside of the house, there are other daily-miscellaneous errands he can also perform and more—such as, for instance, a little gym, or a kinder, too. Such errands help allow your child to understand how information very well. While there are, he gets to meet people from all walks of life and become part of a larger society of which he is a part.

Experimentation

Learning doesn't take place only in the classroom, so give your child a place to play in different environments - like outside, the beach, or the garden. Encourage him to work with his hands and discover his talent. Use examples of his art and add auditory, touch and growth. Don't add too many things, a few kids will want some child will not enjoy even too many colorful flowers such as composition and sympathy. It's best to be careful in order to avoid any situation.

Improve your skills in a safe, healthy and stimulating environment at one of our centers today, and experience the world around you. Give your life a boost in a second.

IN A TIME OF 'POLITICAL UPHEAVAL,' as our media person put it, what is the role of a semi-government institution like the Cultural Center of the Philippines? During the open forum, CCP president Romeo G. Jorda, was to answer the question. "Corruption is embedded not just in the government but in the system," he declared, somewhat joking those present although what he said was hardly new. "As individuals, we are very much concerned about our country."

"But," he continued, "the CCP through its programs can be a power and for social transformation. We have to be positive."

Through performances, events and dialogues, Jorda said, "we teach moral values."

Perpetual Help celebrates 40 years of VALUEducation

TO ASPIRE OUR COUNTRY OF A better tomorrow, we need to build the right kind of character today.

That was what Dr. Carlos Legido (Ferdinand) and his wife Dr. Daisy Maria Legido believed 40 years ago and it was their initial desire to help the country build a better future through Christian values that led them to found the University of Perpetual Help (UPH).

With the vision "Character Building a Future Building," commitment for the first school building began and was followed by a multi-building period of only four months and through the coming years, the University of Perpetual Help would develop the same kind of growth to become one of the premier universities south of Manila.

Dr. Legido, the President of the University of Perpetual Help, credits the successful success of Perpetual Help to offering its 40 unique educational programs. "We're VALUEducation. The students of today are the leaders of tomorrow. We're committed to the right kind of character today - respectful, hardworking and committed to excellence."

The University of Perpetual Help offers more than 100 courses in its programs, preparing their life success in career that are the same in demand around the world, including Nursing, Basic and Business Management & Services, Computer Studies, Business & Accounting and Engineering.

But even their campus students to be globally competitive, the University of Perpetual Help believes its goal is to prepare future leaders. "We're building future leaders - when they step out, they are ready for every challenge, and ready to give back to the community."

In the mid to summer celebration, the University of Perpetual Help Las Piñas campus recently launched University Week, whose highlight was the opening of Perpetual Help's School of Medicine. The 100-year-old medical education school is the Philippines' 1st school to provide postgraduate courses, specialized postgraduate courses, research opportunities, innovation and award a Bachelor's degree in Medicine.

Leading the ceremony was Dr. Carlos Legido L. Legido, the President, Chairman of the Board and CEO of both UPH Systems and School of Medicine and Dr. Legido L. Legido, the President of the UPH System. The ceremony was held at the Las Piñas campus, where Legido L. Legido, the President, Chairman of the Board and CEO of both UPH Systems and School of Medicine, and Dr. Legido L. Legido, the President of the UPH System, were present.

New colors, new worlds from Onglepho

AISA ART GALLERY, ESTABLISHED in 1994 at Shanghai-La Plaza Mall, F&S, Moresbury-mg, has a new home in Unit 2115, EmporiumMall, S&W Mall of Asia, Pasay City.

The gallery has long been enthusiastically displaying James Osgelby's paintings. It is where Osgelby has regularly demonstrated the purity and essential qualities of his work, which are very much admired by collectors.

Since 2008, Ongephor's style has evolved into another artistic period. Meanwhile, concert had formed in his eyes, first in the right, then in the left eye. His eyesight was greatly affected, just finally in the way he approaches subjects.

He died, in October 2000, of cancer of the stomach, diagnosed by his son-in-law, Dr. Jaime Neco of the Instituto Oncológico del Valle de México, the cancer hospital near the airport.

When Greglyphen went outside and saw Laura's Park, he was surprised: "Wow, my grade pals living much."

"I worked at home five days a week, and spent more time reading my collection of books, as well as my own written works on the theories and techniques of painting," he said. "I realized that 2000, 2006 was my transitional period. I began trying to find a breakthrough, to find another reason to move forward."

He did research later "to challenge myself to come up with a new style."

on finding new business in painting. The work is a vast change, especially in the way Oughliffe has expanded his color schemes. His works from the years 2000-2006 were mostly monochromatic, relying around red, yellow and orange hues. Now the new works are more color filled and provide more contrast. Oughliffe, in fact, has added cool colors, such as cool blue and green.

This move has largely enhanced the visual elements of his paintings. This was initially seen in some works at his last one-man exhibit held Jan. 20, 1967, at Asia Art Gallery's new location, the IBM Mall in Asia.

Daghysh says 2008 is a new start, with more of the qualities of his early works but larger content. He is glad to see that the effort in his paintings expresses new values.

Daghysh has always seen himself as a beginner. Each day presents a new experiment and a new world that inspires him to create something new.

I studied painting more than 50 years ago at the University of Notre Dame, and "I am still learning," he said. "Every time I pick up a book, I'm trying to do the best painting I have ever done. Practice makes perfect. Art education is a kind of spiritual activity. I want to know."

The 27th nine-man exhibit of James Tinglepou runs 905, 30-March 28 at Asia Art Gallery, Gagos of House at the opening include Charles D. Chomney & and Jerry Chan. The exhibit consists of paintings, in oil featuring figures and landscapes.

Fifty for a first

By Jessica Johnston-Rodriguez
Contributor

A YEAR AGO, KUDA Gallery opened with an initial offering of 47 artworks by five main members of artists. This past, the gallery devoted to the nice round number of 50 to mark its first anniversary. Thus the exhibit, "50/50."

The idea seems to derive from the serial numbering of prints, but we know that its two artworks by the same artist are still. The idea really seems to say that one space has been divided by 50 individual works.

The goal, says Aldo de la Peña, the planner Calabrese who owns Kuda (and perhaps from whom some of the gallery's name was derived), is to gradually increase the pieces to 100 by the time the gallery marks its 10th birthday.

It is a fun he in this says don't have an ending time in business. Keeping the gallery open to feature new names with great people to art.

Already the gallery has had up several exhibits in the past months by five new artists and/or members of 100 (20 and 20).

Located on top of a modern blue shop and flanked by a pharmaceutical office and an herbal products shop is Kuda, the 40-square-foot to show and showcasing, well, coming both artist and collector to a rather laid-back view of the exhibited works.

The show has two lucky drops on an ornate, horizontal display on the floor and lower than the counter that supports the glass wall.

The show is opened by Fred Gaud. Immediately over one of the two panels by the glass is a detailed painting of a bearded dragon head by 32 Calabrese.

A young artist, Calabrese has a don't have that deliver quick, high-quality prints. Needs to how he precisely captures the shape of the figure head and how light is prominent on parts of its curved surface.

"BAGG" by Randy Salom shows a dog resting head on what appears to be a sofa. The movement of the snail shell shows the artist to be a light and shade master.

Departure

Jodie Montemayor's "Falling Blood" is a triptych from where to gray and black. It's a departure from his signature, instead of the most elevated drawings in his charged drawings, he now has a compressed lineup of people, a sort of battle of humanity.

These three lower again show in depicting an up-and-up looking in 2006. The other choice provides an apt change offer for the architecture.

José Henssler uses a real picture, or again with light. On this he paints and continues, resulting in some love, as if the person were crumpled or folded.

Another mixed-media work is that by Susan Gray, where a lion figure gazed at a crown is in a skeletal form of metal sticks pulled and twisted into the crown. The piece reminds the position of contemporary sculpture in the art of the 1960s.

Thomas Henssler, too, is greatly more subtle. The mixed dog-and master and the fish-headed body of a woman has a self-explanatory title, "The Hunter and the Master."

There are only three inside 1000 as yet in a room of 30. Very telling, that the days true to her skilled style and needs are with "50/50" being along about the piece.

Only two highly different artworks are on display. Mike Gaudin has on them, which includes a round figure and a pair of glass, supposedly self-bidding, but above it a preserved or well-known bird.

In opposite to Joe Gaudin's two-piece, a building of common and uncommon birds, other things together for life or all making sense.

Though choosing what works to appreciate or buy may be difficult, it is more common by the common 10" x 10" size. In addition still just have to negotiate with Kuda and not the whole lot for themselves. Call 41-44777 for details.

Raul Isidro evokes his own 'Landscapes'

By Lisa B. Zubara

RAUL G. ISIDRO'S ART IS SO prodigious, that an lover or collector is hard-pressed to keep up with him. Although lately judging in print, the was president of the Philippine Association of Printmakers from 2001 to 2006, he has readily produced paintings and sculptures across the years: that career did so show the very, steady and vision that won for him The Outstanding Young Man of the Philippines (TYOM) award for fine arts in 1979.

But while he at home young, it is not common. Like his generation of abstractists who came after José Joya, he has been compared to the National Artist even if he did not study under him. In fact, when he won the TYOM, he told his friends: "I don't know why working in abstraction is always identified with José's style. The truth is that José is from UP and I'm from UST... so I'll just continue working and let people find out what the difference is."

The difference is that, aside from having studied under someone with a far longer his-prof by Isidro's own deepening sensibility. Like his generation, he has largely given his themes and images from nature and to memory. That's why his recent solo exhibit of seascapes—the 4th—has a very convincing title, "Landscapes." His artistic exploration seems rooted in the here and now.

If there's any change in the new series, it's the color palette and the even more confident brushwork. "Blue Ocean" is a brilliant example of sky and clouds, with the orange-brown tones the evokes of dusk light that seem from beyond the horizon. And "Red Road" is a dripping lovely, too (could Isidro see the fish don't in the pond).

There are more poems that speak with Isidro's art. It has been said more than once that Isidro's landscapes are really seas (rather than clouds). The may be true, but the far more important truth is that Isidro's art has the capacity to create calm. The same holds true for his landscape art.

Raul G. Isidro's "Landscapes" opens Feb. 28, 6:00 p.m., at OneLife Gallery, 3M Mega Mall, Mandaluyong City. It will run until March 11. Call 6355061.

ory in modernism (his teacher was the famed Josefa de Guzman and his book shows were Justice de Guzman and Prudente Llanera), Isidro's abstraction is then softened by a lyrical beauty and an evocative quality that, perhaps even back to his senior sophistication and romantic work today.

Isidro is an artist that has continued to evolve not in abandonment of experience, vision and theme but in the depth of his artistic exploration. His abstracted shapes have gone from wide and circular to his own and darker, while the colors have gone from earth colors and blues to even darker hues.

All of these visions and visions aren't really radical or strange. They're bold in

Have you heard of histrionic personality disorder? The signs are: attention-seeking behavior; being very dramatic, theatrical, etc.; people who have this disorder are uncomfortable unless they are the center of attention. They are provocative, seductive and flirtatious, and very vain, though they're always in front of an audience. Their emotions and expressions are exaggerated, yet they will appear to lack anxiety because others find these reactions, like such complaints as,
